Football players score big with book club

Inspired by former New York Giant Devon Kennard's passion for reading, Mr. Bilmes and Coach Stochmal have instituted a Wolverine Book Club for the OHS football team. Each player on the football team is required to read a free-choice book, and report on it to their teammates. Both the Giants and the Jets have donated prizes to the players upon completion of their books, ranging from baseball caps to two autographed footballs donated by the Jets. Jason and Matt were the first two players to finish their books, and Matt has already finished a second book. Coach Stox is even reading a book himself and sharing it with the team.

OHS students break out!

Breakout EDU has arrived at OHS. Based upon the popular Escape Room trend, Breakout EDU is an activity where students have to solve clues to break into two locked boxes, opening a total of five locks, within a set period of time. Mr. Giovacchino's Civics classes were the first students to participate in the activity at OHS (staff members have played during Professional Development days). After studying the American Revolution, Mr. G's classes played a Torys vs. Colonists Breakout game. This group of girls were in the first class to play, and were the first group in their class to break out, doing so with just a few minutes to spare. That made them the first Breakout EDU champs in school history! In several classes all the groups broke out in the 45 minutes of allotted time, while several came close but ran out of time. To get extra hints, students had to sing "I Am a Little Teapot" in honor of the Boston Tea Party.

You're never too old for Keva Planks

While most students are glued to their devices during down time in the LMC, they sometimes can be enticed to put them down and use their brains in a more creative manner. Beth and Ryan, two stars of the recent school musical, spent a study hall period the week after they starred in Little Shop of Horrors to build this house with the Keva Planks. It was a good exercise in perseverance, as it took multiple attempts before they were able to construct a roof that covered the entire structure.
